

Script and Sync Audit Manuscript

Chapter One: The Door

Narrator: Ava St. John

Avery stepped into the old studio with a notebook under one arm. The room smelled like paper, rain, and hot tea.

"No," Mara said. "Not that door."

Avery laughed. "It is always that door."

The floorboards answered with a long creak. This paragraph is deliberately long so the importer has a real body paragraph to split, wrap, and preserve during exports without relying on tiny perfect test data that hides formatting problems.

Mara whispered, "No." Then she pointed at the brass sign: Chapter files, audio files, and proof flags must all survive a restart.

Chapter Two: The Ledger

Narrator: Julian Vale

Julian opened the ledger and found three names written in blue ink: Avery, Mara, and Quinn.

"No," Quinn said.

"No," Avery said, because repeated short dialogue should not confuse side-voice comments or page matching.

A label read: Scene A. Another label read: Scene B. The audit needs scenes, but if a tester cannot find a scene button, that is navigation proof, not a bug.

Mara said, "Keep the audio local." Julian replied, "Only text and timestamps go to cloud."

Chapter Three: The Very Short Chapter

Narrator: Ava St. John

One line. One flag. One export.

"Done," Mara said.
